

Name: Nazmi Almasri

Country: Palestine

Institution: IUG – Islamic University of Gaza

Role: Associate Professor in Education – English language teaching

Nazmi Al-Masri is Associate Professor at the English Language Department, Islamic University of Gaza, Palestine. He worked in several senior academic positions including Vice President for External Affairs at IUG. He has been teaching several courses for undergraduates and graduates including Technology in Teaching English, Oral Communication skills, English for specific purposes and curriculum development and evaluation. His main research interests include pedagogy and technology, teacher training, teaching English and Arabic as foreign languages and intercultural communication. He has been a co-investigator on about 20 British and EU-funded projects (research, capacity building and mobility projects) in full partnership with several British and European universities. He co-published several education and training articles related to online teaching and training in international journals as shown in his CV on the his website below. He also co-edited a related book with two British colleagues: Multilingual Online Academic Collaborations as Resistance: Crossing Impassable Borders (Aug 2020). He was a member of the Palestinian National Team for the development of the first English language curriculum and textbooks currently used in all Palestinian schools, English for Palestine Series published by Macmillan, UK.

Email: nmasri@iugaza.edu.ps

Website & CV: <http://site.iugaza.edu.ps/nmasri/>